What It is All About

This session gives delegates a chance to consider exactly what a consultant is. Related terms are discussed and then delegates look at the qualities it takes to be a consultant.

Business Building Blocks

This session allows delegates to get a further look at becoming a consultant. It focuses on identifying the possibilities for your business, how to conduct your research and what your business should target.

Crunching the Numbers

Here, delegates are shown methods to develop financial budgets and projections with a look at personal expenses, business expenses and income targets. Also looked at are ways to set a pay rate and income goals.

Planning Your Business

Every business needs a plan, and, in this session, delegates are introduced to types of business plans along with a business set-up checklist and how to gather resources.

Test Driving

Delegates are prompted in this module to consider their business model. They are encouraged, through the use of worksheets, to take a look at the major aspects of their proposed consulting business to see if they are viable.

Creating a Sales and Marketing Strategy

Following up a business strategy with a marketing strategy is good business sense. This session touches on ways to promote a new consulting business with the aid of various tools. It looks at the marketing cycle, social media, and other ways to get noticed.

Getting the Work Done

Once a business is set up and marketed, it is important to know just how to get work and get it done. In this session, learners are invited to discuss how to identify sources of work, how to develop contracts and statements of work, how to deal with problems arising with clients, and how to stay current in a chosen field.
