Orientation Handbook Getting Employees Off To A Good Start

Course Overview

An effective human resource professional knows that managing employee performance is more than responding to problems, conducting performance reviews, or hiring staff. Performance management begins with an orientation to the organization and the job. This continues on a daily basis as employees are trained and coached.

A thoughtful new employee orientation program, coupled with an employee handbook (or website) that communicates workplace policies, can reduce turnover and those reductions save your organization money. Whether your company has two employees or a thousand employees, do not leave employee retention to chance. Engage them from the moment they are hired, give them what they need to feel welcome and let them impress you with what they bring to your company. This two-day workshop is just the start that you need.

Learning objectives for delegates include:

- Understand how important an orientation program is to an organization.
- Identify the role of the human resource department in the orientation program.
- Recognize how the commitment curve affects both new employees and their managers.
- Know what companies can do to deliver their promise to new employees.
- Determine the critical elements of effective employee training.
- Establish the importance of having an employee handbook for new and long-term employees.

Prerequisite

There are no prerequisites.

Target

This workshop is for Managers, HR Managers, Supervisors, Team Leaders or anyone moving into such a role.

Duration

- 2 Days

Course Outline

Finding, Hiring, and Keeping Good People

To begin, delegates will discuss the organizational activities required to find, hire, and keep good people, and how those activities tie into an orientation process.

Building Employee Commitment

Next, delegates will learn about the four pillars of commitment: clarity, competence, influence, and appreciation.

Perception

During this session, delegates will explore how perceptions and appearances can affect orientation.

Fast-Track Orientation

This session will discuss what kind of orientation is best for short term employees.

Designing a Successful Orientation Program

Next, delegates will think about their own experiences with orientation. They will combine this with a list of common orientation mistakes to develop a framework for designing a successful program.

Characteristics of a Successful Orientation Process

During this session, delegates will discuss the top ten characteristics of a successful orientation process and how they can incorporate those items into their organization.

The Commitment Curve

Next, delegates will learn about the employer/employee commitment curve, and how to make the orientation process work with it.

The Nine Orientation Habits of World-Class Employers

During this session, delegates will learn what world-class employers do to make their orientation program a success.

Obtaining Buy-In

This session will give delegates some ways to get buy-in from supervisors for the orientation program.

Employee Training

Delegates will spend this session learning how Kolb's learning styles apply to employee orientation and training.

Adult Learning

This session will introduce delegates to the principles of adult learning. Delegates will also discuss how to incorporate these principles into orientation and training.

Working with External Providers

Next, delegates will discuss what to consider when working with external providers during orientation.

Helping People Make Connections

In this session, delegates will learn how to help people establish good relationships. They will also consider the value of a workplace buddy.

Creating Employee Manuals

During this session, delegates will discuss what should be included in employee handbooks.

A Bridge to Onboarding

To wrap up the day, delegates will create a checklist of necessary items for their orientation. Then, they will work with a partner to brainstorm ways to improve their current orientation process.
